The U.S. Embassy in France informs U.S. citizens that several national unions across a variety of sectors have called for a general strike in protest of proposed labor laws to take place on Tuesday, July 5, 2016. Affected sectors include, but are not limited to, the national rail network, airports, the Paris public transportation system, education, health workers, and energy.

Even demonstrations intended to be peaceful can turn confrontational and escalate into violence. You should avoid areas of demonstrations, and exercise caution if in the vicinity of any large gatherings, protests, or demonstrations.

Travelers are advised to verify the status of their flights, trains, or other public transportation services prior to their travel. Travelers are advised that these strikes could result in delays or cancellations of trains, flights, and other transportation services.

Travelers can also track updates on Twitter through services such as Aéroports de Paris (@ParisAeroport) or your local airport or air carrier, the Prefecture de Police for your area (@PrefPolice is the one for Paris), SNCF (@SNCF), and your metro or rail line. French news sources such as BFMTV, Le Parisien, and France24 TV (available in English or French) are also likely to carry information about the strikes' impact.

If you need to cancel or exchange a TGV or Intercity train ticket, visit the SNCF website here: <http://www.sncf.com/fr/echange-remboursement-tgv-intercites>

For up-to-date information on SNCF plans (or to check your specific train), consult the SNCF website here:
